

AER ONLINE JOURNAL EDITORIAL BOARD CALL FOR PAPERS 2018
School of Environmental Studies, University of Eldoret

Africa Environmental Review Journal (AER Journal) Calls for Scholarly Papers to be published in the 2018 Vol. 3, Issues 1

Africa Environmental Review (AER) is an online peer-reviewed international multidisciplinary publication covering all aspects of the environmental sciences and published by the School of Environmental Studies, University of Eldoret, Kenya. AER aims to publish the best of environmental science articles across its full range, whilst including articles in which a variety of different data is synthesized. Typically, these will be applied to the African region, but their implications will be wider and their approaches could be adopted elsewhere.

The AER Journal is presenting an opportunity to those who wish to publish their Research/ Scholarly papers. The thematic areas of the papers include environmental management and conservation, drought identification, climate change issues, sustainable livelihoods in arid and semi-arid lands (ASALs), resource conflicts, wetlands and biodiversity, aquatic biodiversity, forestry, wildlife management, environmental social sciences, spatial information management technology and its applications in participatory rural planning and management, disaster management, water harvesting, ecosystems, environmental health, pollution, public health, geological sciences and environmental law. AER journal seeks to further the study and practice of environmental management and action providing forum for researchers, scholars, practitioners and policy makers.
